SILICONE VS. GLYCOL-BASED BRAKE FLUIDS

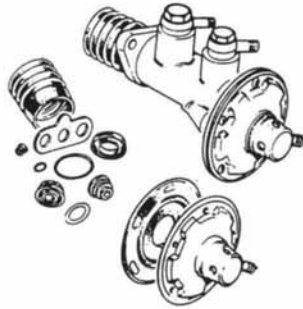

Before you switch to silicone brake fluid consider the following facts that have come to light from both authorities and experience.

Probably the most important consideration is that ordinary glycol-based fluids swell the seals, helping them to seal, however, the swelling additives in silicone fluid are incompatible with some types of rubber used in the hydraulic systems of older cars and can cause the seals to swell too much, soften and possibly deteriorate, as some users have reported.

Also, due to the amount of air trapped in silicone fluid, pedal feel may be spongy and require more travel than when using glycol-based fluids.

Finally, mixing the two fluids causes separation of the swell and anti-corrosion additives, negating their effectiveness.
